

Scientists close to invisibility

■ Scientists have succeeded in creating a new device which can bend light and make solid objects invisible. The team of scientists couldn't say when the device would be ready for production, but once they have managed to perfect the device, they are hoping to be able to use it for a range of different uses, both civilian and military.

Presentation

You can use can, could and be able to to talk about ability:

The new device can bend light.

They will be able to use the device for a range of uses.

They couldn't say when the device would be ready.

can / could

Use can/can't (cannot) to talk about ability in the present and the future. If you want to talk about ability in the past, use could/couldn't.

It can bend light. (= present)

We can't show you until next week. (= future)

They couldn't say anymore. (= past)

be able to

There is no infinitive or participle form (-ed or -ing form) of can or could. When we need an infinitive or participle form, we use be/been/being able to.

We'll soon be able to put the device into production.

They haven't been able to find a sponsor.

Being able to speak Japanese is very important.

could and was / were able to

You can use both could and was/were able to to talk about general abilities in the past:

He was the best person for the job. He could speak Japanese and he had experience of working in the arts.

I was the only one in my class who wasn't able to / couldn't swim.

We use was/were able to (not could) to talk about success in a particular task or activity:

She was able to find a substitute for Tim. (not She could find a substitute for Tim.)

You can use both couldn't and wasn't/weren't able to to talk about not succeeding in a particular task or activity:

She couldn't/wasn't able to help him.

manage to and succeed in

You can also use manage to (+ infinitive) and succeed in (+ -ing) to talk about success (or lack of success) in a particular task or activity, but not to talk about general abilities:

Once the team manage to perfect their device, they will be able to put it on the market.

Scientists have succeeded in creating a new device.
